Dated: Dec. 2008
 I have been noticing some changes in my body over the past several months. I am not sure what is happening, I have been experiencing unusual muscle growth and back pains. I hope this passes soon because I am off to South America and want to enjoy all it has to offer!

Dated: Jan. 2009
 I am currently exploring Buenos Aires, an exquisite place. However, my back pain has started becoming unbearable. I can barely make it three blocks without having to lie down. I really must get myself to the doctor when I get back.

Dated: Mar. 2009
 I cannot fathom the test results my doctors are presenting me. I have been diagnosed with a rare form of testicular cancer. I have large tumors around my torso and some of my organs. Must maintain a positive outlook though, this is another adventure in my life, albeit a sinister one.

The physicians at Denver's Porter Adventist Hospital are fantastic. I started several rounds of chemotherapy. However, this caused a tear in my aorta. Two emergency surgeries and 70 units of donated blood were needed to help me survive. They say I could need several more units through the rest of my treatment.

Dated: May 2010
 It has been almost a year and a half since this began and this life-threatening experience has been difficult but inspirational. I am looking forward to the next adventure which will be meeting several of the nearly 100 generous volunteer blood donors who saved my life and thanking all the amazing people at Bonfils Blood Center and Porter Adventist Hospital that made it possible for me to be here today, cancer-free.
